PRESIDENT BILL BY WILLIAM L. BROWN

M © PRESIDENT BILL

My wife, Mary, ★ ★ ★ would have none of that demeaning "first lady" nonsense; she served as my chief of staff. But, from the beginning of my administration, a small, disaffected element in the media criticized her, questioning her credentials for the job. We debunked their claims, showing that she was one of the top-rated science teachers in her school, and citing studies showing that the experience of motherhood was easily the equivalent of a Ph.D. But her critics continued to harp about everything from her travel expenses to her friends. ★ ★ ★ ★

I © PRESIDENT BILL

I strove to be an ★ ★ example of progressive fatherhood to the nation, giving my family priority over my work. When the children contracted chickenpox and had to be sent home from the Vice President/Day Care Provider's Preschool Program for the children of my administration members, I gladly took over my share of the parenting, even though I had pressing presidential affairs. Actually, I was glad for the chance to slow down a bit and spend time with the whole family. I rather liked the notion of working in the Oval Office while my children played at my feet.

"President Bill" appears in President Bill, a Graphic Epic, a book published by Andrews and McMeel. This book is now available at Faces, Food For Thought Books, and the Beyond Words bookstore. Get caught up on the story. It's worth it.

Ouch. It would be pretty reckless to walk into a big competition unprepared, wouldn't it?

Now think of the SAT or ACT. Not much difference is there? To do your best, and score the most, you have to be prepared. That's why there's Stanley H. Kaplan.

Our test-taking techniques and educational review have helped over 100,000 high school students' SAT and ACT scores soar.

So if you're facing competition on the PSAT, SAT, ACT, or Achievement tests, call Kaplan. This athlete wouldn't face her future without preparation. Why should you?

Well, it's been a few weeks. Since we last talked I had my little summer fling with acting at the Mount Holyoke College Summer Theatre as Sherlock Holmes, and if you ever need to lose a few pounds, try acting in a tent when the temperature is 175°. Be sure to wear three layers of wool clothing while you're at it. But on the whole it was a rather enjoyable experience, and I would like to thank the folks at MHCST for making me feel so welcome. There were a few interesting moments out there, prop guns that wouldn't fire, and our Mrs. Hudson was taken to the hospital mid-performance with a gall bladder attack (she's all right, thanks for asking), and the heat made one tend to forget what planet they were on, but the audiences there are loyal, and any miscues were taken with all the grace and good humor one can expect.

So what has happened to the world since last we met? Thurgood! You Bastard! I understand you want to go fishing, and your body is falling apart, but look whom you left us with! Clarence! Now I am sure he's nice guy and all, has a dog and is kind to his mother etc., but anyone who has some sort of moral epiphany the first time he smokes a joint seems to be one to make rash decisions based on a drug induced state. I mean, who hasn't felt some qualms when they first try marijuana? "Was that a knock at the door?" we asked ourselves in the heyday of boo, but we soon recognized that to be a fairly normal haze of paranoia. I would trust Clarence more if he said he was a real pothead in college, and then came to realize what a bad thing it was and how it was funding the Underworld and killing his brothers, yadda yadda yadda. But once? Give me a break!

Another thing about Clarence is that the worst kind of bore in the world is some yutz who says "I made it on my own. Anybody can." Sure Clarence, anyone with an above average intelligence, a kind and loving family and Thurgood Marshall to pave the way for you. You have a responsibility to those who went before you, and to those who come after. Maybe, just maybe Clarence, you are a fluke. You beat some mighty big odds, and now you want to screw it up for everybody else.

What else? Michael Landon died, as did Jean Arthur (I had a major crush on her after Mr. Smith Goes to Washington), Lee Remick (ditto after seeing A Face in the Crowd), and Bert Convey (I did not have a crush on him, but I do think it's a shame that for a talented Broadway actor, he will most be remembered by a game show that had Burt Reynolds drawing little dogs on a big piece of paper).

The Pretorian government has been caught funding the Inkatha Freedom Party (Big surprise!), there's been a solar eclipse, and Terminator 2 came out. A kinder, gentler Terminator. "I won't kill you, I'll just shoot you in the kneecap and cripple you for life". (Big laughs on that one.)

And the Red Sox.

So the world wags on, we grow older, and I shaved my mustache. Who said the world isn't interesting?

WILLIAM CASEY'S REMAINS EXHUMED TO TEST FOR RESIDUE OF 1980 OCTOBER SURPRISE

Humor Me by Izzy Gesell

Recently released brain research indicates that although men and women process information in a similar manner, the interpretation of that information differs greatly from gender to gender. This seems to be another case of common knowledge being repackaged under the guise of scientific breakthrough. We all know that men and women have different criteria in assessing aspects of life. A woman once told me that I had the one thing every woman wanted in a man. "What's that?" I asked. "The ability to make passionate, sensitive, creative love and not fall asleep immediately when I'm done?" "No," she chuckled. "Well, is it the fact that I'm the only male who actually LIKES to go food shopping and uses coupons?" "No, dear," she said as her eyes rolled toward the goddess. "It's the fact that you put the toilet seat down when you leave the bathroom." Guys, it is a truism that you could be Charlie Manson's NASTY brother and by putting the toilet seat down when you leave the bathroom not only will you find a woman who loves you but she'll brag about you to her friends.

Many women think men purposely leave the seat up to piss them off. That's not true. New scientific studies prove it's genetic. That's right. We lack the ability to put the seat down. In it's place men can do something that women cannot: go through all 36 channels on the remote control in less than 30 seconds and describe exactly what each show is about. Watch a man and woman sitting together in front of a TV. Odds are he's got the remote control and is zooming around the dial faster than time-lapse photography in a Disney nature film. She's going, "WAIT! WAIT! WAIT! WAIT! I WANT TO SEE THAT! I WANT TO SEE THAT! I WANT TO SEE THAT!" "No, you don't," he says. "Besides, I just want to see the score."

When the woman finally does get control of the remote she clicks and pauses. She chooses what to watch based on actually seeing something and making some kind of rational decision related to whether what she sees is what she wants. This may take a few seconds. In those few seconds the guy next to her starts to twitch. His hand begins to shake and he lunges toward the remote. "GIVE ME THAT! YOUR TIME'S UP! YOU'RE TOO SLOW! I NEED IT NOW." These are early signs of RCA (remote control addiction). There are treatment centers located in rural areas without cable TV but they are very expensive and are usually only for the rich and powerful.

Now that's the bad news. The good news is that it is now possible to remedy the male inability to put the toilet seat down. Hook it up to a remote control.

THE BRASS & FERN

By Steve Riehm

JOE BOB BRIGGS

I'm feeling especially manly today. I just got back from one of those Wild Man Weekends where you go out in the woods with twenty other guys and put bandanas on your head and beat tom-toms together to prove you're not a wimp.

It was great. I sweated a lot. I cried. I sweated while I was crying. Of course, I was crying because they made me sweat so much. We had this one part of the weekend where we went in a giant sauna and turned it up to about, oh, 280, until everybody's skin turned the color of strawberry Jello and the veins in our foreheads started exploding, and it turned into this communal out-of-body male thing, where everybody was screaming "I want out of my body!" Unfortunately Saul Steinman didn't make it through that part of the weekend. Saul was a fine insurance adjuster from Milwaukee who got a brain hemorrhage and died. We'll miss him. But what was great about that is that we got to have the ancient dead-warrior ritual where we piled stones on top of Saul's body and set him on fire, and then we started really feeling like men.

Do y'all know what I'm talking about? You've heard about this? It's the Masculine Movement, where we get back in touch with our caveman selves. It's so powerful. You really can't understand it unless you've been there, but when I got finished with the Wild Man Weekend, I didn't wanna bathe for at least two years. And normally I would wanna bathe once every two weeks. It changes you that much.

As explained by our Wild Man Weekend instructor, Norm Moseby, the process involves five phases: Sweating, Yelling, Crying, Drum-Beating, and Ripping Your Shirt Off Even If It's Expensive.

You may wonder why we do this stuff. It's because the modern American male has lost touch with his primitive self. They used to have a ceremony called Separating From The Mother. (Of course, they still do. It's called the "Get a job!" ceremony.) But now most guys, according to Norm, never separate from their mothers. They think all women are their mothers, and so they expect all their girlfriends to take care of their emotional needs.

Once I understood this, I called up my mother to tell her I was separating from her.

"That's nice," she said. "I'm glad you have a hobby."

The other ceremony they used to have is called Initiation Into the Company of Men. Of course, we still have this one, too. It's called "beer." In primitive times they would ram crooked sticks through your breast, like in "A Man Called Horse," and then beat you with a Lincoln Log or something until you felt like a man. But Norm says the modern American man never does this, and so he spends his whole life feeling uncomfortable around other men, and never talking to them about anything except football.

I hope you're following this.

That's why we start off with the lobster-sauna Sweating Ceremony. Then we move on to the Yelling Like Banshees Ceremony. Then we sit in a circle, and whoever has the stick gets to talk, and he's supposed to say stuff from "A Chorus Line," like "I was always afraid I was a homosexual, and my father kicked my Tonka dumptruck when I was seven and I never got over it," until he starts bawling like a baby in front of everybody else.

Next comes Beating The Manly Tom-Tom. In order to get in touch with our real wild-man self, we whale away on these drums and slam dance against trees until we lose control and become the drum — or something like that. I didn't quite understand what the point was, because I lost control and started giving noogies to Fred Bushman, a Xerox marketing analyst from Tampa, Florida. Sometimes guys get so carried away they start screaming out personal stuff, from the deepest part of the primitive brain lobe, like "She divorced me because I never could stand her sister!"

And, finally, we get to the Ceremony of the Ripping Shirt, where we cavort around like apes in the jungle, exposing our manly flesh to the elements, revealing our manliness to other men, becoming the true warrior-king-lovergods that we always were but Brenda Weatherby in tenth grade would never believe it. Then we make a conga line and dance out into the woods and plunge into the river and splash around like alligator gar on cocaine until we feel manly enough to take off all our clothes and rip the guts out of a wild hog.

I felt so much better after this. I went back to Grapevine, Texas, where I live, and I told my girlfriend Wanda Bodine everything I'd been through, and she said, "That sounds great. Did they teach you how to wear the same color sock on both feet?"

You ever feel like women don't understand just how manly we are?

It bugs me.

EARTHWEEK: A DIARY OF THE PLANET

By Steve Newman

Eruptions

Dozens of people were killed as heavy rains dislodged tons of debris from the volcanic slopes of Mt. Pinatubo, northwest of Manila. The Philippines announced that it may have to replenish the wildlife of the forests around the mountain once the eruptions stop, because fleeing animals were all eaten by local residents. Environment Secretary Fulgencio Factoran said that all trees and plants within a six-mile radius of Pinatubo were destroyed, and that the population of deer, boar, insects, lizards, and snakes native to the area may have been entirely wiped out.

Torrential rains unleashed a landslide of volcanic mud, rock, and ash from Japan's Mt. Unzen that cut a five-mile swath through three towns.

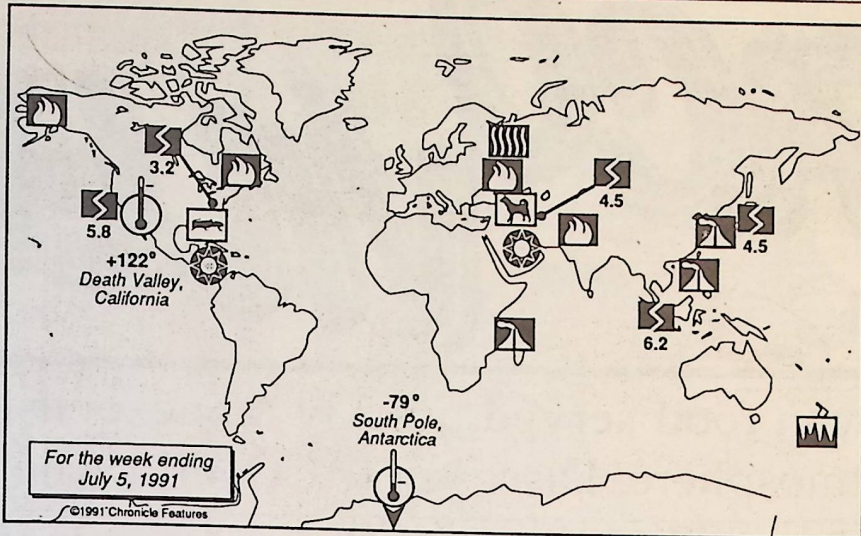

Tremors around Kartala Volcano near the Comoros capital of Moroni sparked fears that the mountain might erupt. It would be the first time since 1977, when 20,000 were left homeless on the Indian Ocean island as lava destroyed villages.

Earthquakes

Residents in the San Gabriel foothill communities northeast of Los Angeles cleaned up rubble and debris left by a strong tremor that rattled much of Southern California on June 28. At least one person was killed by the earthquake that caused an estimated $12 million in damage. Quakes were also felt in Tokyo, northwestern Iran, Sumatra, and West Virginia.

Hoppers

Agricultural officials in Florida are poised to attack the next generation of grasshoppers whose parents have caused the state's worst infestation in 40 years. Found swarming around Dade City last month, a species of American grasshopper has swept across thousands of acres around Tampa Bay, leaving dozens of citrus groves stripped of their leaves. In-secticides have been effective only against young hoppers, and plans are now underway to attack those set to hatch next month.

Ash and Sun

A spreading cloud of gas and ash from Mt. Pinatubo Volcano is expected to create spectacular multicolored sunrises and sunsets in several areas of the Northern Hemisphere. The cloud stretches from Hawaii to the Mediterranean and is moving eastward at 750 to 1,000 miles each day. Observers as far north as parts of Texas and Florida, and southern Europe, should be able to see the natural display at dusk and dawn while the cloud is overhead.

A huge soot cloud thought to be caused by burning oil wells in Kuwait covered the sky over Bahrain and eastern Saudi Arabia, obscuring the sun and dropping the normally scorching temperatures by about 14 degrees.

Wildfires

A heat wave and thousands of lightning strikes in Alaska sparked forest fires in the state's dry interior, including one that burned to within a mile of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline. More than 1,000 firefighters fought the blazes near several small towns.

Thousands of people fled their homes in Quebec province as strong winds pushed two huge forest fires dangerously close to towns and villages on the north shore of the St. Lawrence River.

Forest fires were also raging out of control in Russia's southeastern Ukraine, and in Pakistani-controlled Kashmir.

Moscow Heat

A summer heat wave brought the Soviet capital its hottest June 29 in more than a century. Electric fans were unavailable at state stores, which had only heaters in stock.

Kiwi Cold

New Zealand experienced the coldest June in 15 years. The extreme winter cold is likely to continue, according to the country's meteorological service. The chill has been caused by a low pressure area near the Chatham Islands that forced south-southwest antarctic winds over both the north and south islands.

Wild Dogs

Stray dogs turned loose in the Azerbaijan's capital by owners who can't feed them are roaming the city in wild packs. An acute food shortage and a drop in living standards is forcing an increasing number of people in Baku to abandon their dogs, according to a report from the Assa-irada Azerbaijan news agency.

EARTHWEEK: A DIARY OF THE PLANET

By Steve Newman

Solar Eclipse

A seven-minute eclipse was seen by more than 220 million people in a broad band from Hawaii to Brazil. In some Latin American countries natives beat drums to urge the sun to return, and village healers in Nicaragua urged pregnant women to remain indoors because the eclipse could cause birth defects. A Peruvian scientist suggested that people keep their pets indoors because the unexpected darkness could confuse dogs and cats and they might suddenly attack.

Fierce Floods

More than 3 million people, including 500,000 members of the People's Liberation Army, are fighting floods that have ravaged eastern China and left more than 22 million acres of land under water. Engineers blew up at least eight earthen dams to divert floodwaters along the Yangtze and Yellow River. Other dams throughout eastern China collapsed during heavy rains.

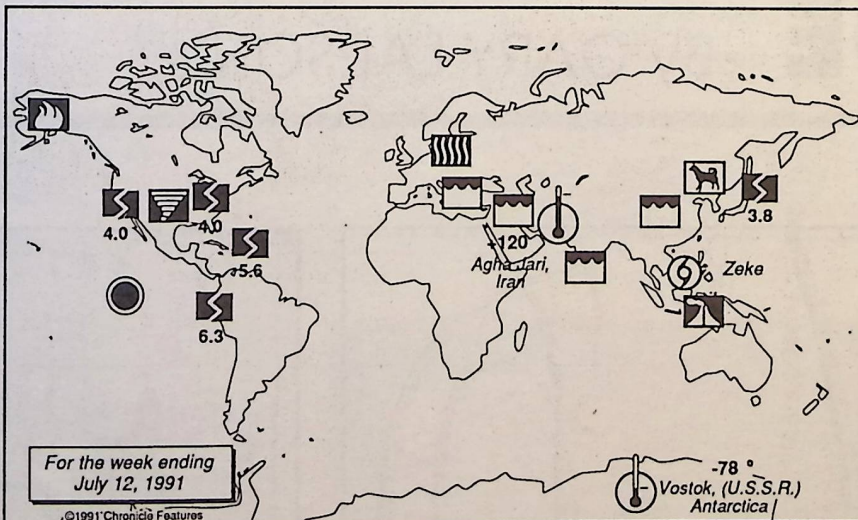

Rising waters from the Caspian Sea forced the evacuation of 50,000 people from the Azerbaijani city of Astara. Teheran radio said flooding also destroyed several other coastal towns.

Floodwaters in Turkey have isolated at least 40 villages near the Black Sea. The Turkish news agency Anatolia said at least 20 people have died.

The Press Trust of India reported that 99 people were killed this week when monsoon rains swept the south Indian state of Kerala.

Volcanic Aftermath

Thousands of Philippine villagers began sifting the volcanic ash from Mount Pinatubo after glittering crystals were found. The rush was set off when traders from Manila arrived in the area to buy the stones, triggering rumors that the crystals were diamonds. A government geologist said the stones were quartz crystals formed by hardening magma within the volcano.

European Heat Wave

Temperatures in excess of 93 degrees Fahrenheit sent thousands of people to lakes and rivers in Wrocław in southeast Poland. Dozens of people, most of them children, died in drowning accidents as they attempted to find relief from the heat. In Denmark, 13 elderly people died when temperatures soared into the upper 80s. About 140 scouts attending a festival on the Jutland Peninsula collapsed during the heat wave.

Alaska Fires

More than 120 wildfires have swept through a half million acres of central Alaska. Crews built firelines to protect the towns of Takonta, McGrath, and Minchumina. Officials fear the fires may endanger moose, brown bear, black bear, and several caribou herds which inhabit the area.

Violent Storms

A series of violent storms rolled across the mid-southern United States and left at least 10 people dead. Intense thunderstorms swept through Pennsylvania and Iowa uprooting trees and downing power lines. Several people were killed by lightning, including one man who was struck in Texas as he visited the grave of his son.

Earthquakes

An earthquake of 6.3 magnitude on the Richter scale damaged some structures in Cuzco, Peru, but caused no deaths. Other earth movements were felt in Japan, Puerto Rico, Missouri, and Southern California.

Dog Mother

Terrified pet owners in Beijing are taking their animals to a shelter run by an elderly Beijing woman to escape official dog-beating squads. The woman, known only as "Dog Mother," moves the shelter from location to location because armed police break into homes and beat the pets to death to stop the spread of cholera. Police stop pet owners on the streets, place their dogs in sacks and then bludgeon them to death. A woman who calls herself Xio Zhang said four policemen broke into her house and "two of the policemen pinned me down while the other lashed out at my dog with iron bars." She said the police left when she promised to have her dog destroyed. Instead, she took her miniature poodle to "Dog Mother."

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

"And here we are last summer off the coast of ... Helen, is this Hawaii or Florida?"

"You're a long way from Big Poodle, stranger. ... This here is Dead Skunk, and if I were you I'd just keep on movin'."

"And so please welcome one of this cartoon's most esteemed scientist-like characters, Prof. Boris Needleman, here to present his paper, 'Beyond the Border: Analysis, Statistical Probability and Speculation of the Existence of Other Cartoons on the Known Comics Page.'"

The Kongs at home

The Blob family at home

"Hey! Not this new stuff. ... Me want Jurassic Coke."

The 100-meter mosey

Eventually, the chickens were able to drive a wedge between Farmer Bob and Lulu.
